

Blog 3rd to 8th November 2017

3/11/17

Day 32, Friday - Today I began to plan two new presentations on Scotland, Germany, Australia and England. This hasn't been too difficult, and I've actually learnt a lot myself about the countries I've lived in. At points I have also started to feel nostalgic for the small things, like German food and my English boarding school.

4/11/17

Day 33, Saturday - All of today was very relaxed, which was really nice. At lunchtime I went out to buy some clothes in the shops downtown. Otherwise all I did was complete a whole bunch of homework for school and university preparations.

5/11/17

Day 34, Sunday - This morning I was simply trying to finish some work for school. Afterwards, for lunch my host family and I went to a really nice buffet restaurant, before heading out to see the Crescent Bridge in the evening, which was really lovely!

6/11/17

Day 35, Monday - I found out I'm allowed to go for a week to Australia for Christmas this year! I am extremely excited to go, as I haven't seen my family there in over 2 years. This does mean that I am now obliged to get everyone Christmas presents, which I don't think I have the money for. On top of this my little sister's birthday is in a couple of weeks, so I'll have to send her something from Taiwan very soon, if it's to get to her on time.

7/11/17

Day 36, Tuesday - At 7:40am I gave my second last presentation on Scotland, and during the afternoon I went with Kate to one of her English classes, where we managed to convince the entire class to come to Scottish ceilidh dancing class. I wonder what they'll think of it.

8/11/17

Day 37, Wednesday - Apart from continuing on with my normal activities, nothing unusual or mention-worthy has happened yet today.